Ensure the Future of Iraq's Cultural Heritage with Student Scholarships

The Iraqi Institute for the Conservation of Antiquities and Heritage (IICAH), a modern teaching facility in Erbil, in northern Iraq, brings together specialists from throughout Iraq who are responsible for the conservation and preservation of their cultural heritage.

Coming from diverse backgrounds, the students live together and study collections conservation and historic preservation. At the IICAH they learn current heritage preservation issues and practices from international expert teaching a curriculum guided by a consortium of prestigious US institutions, including the University of Delaware Art Conservation Program, Winterthur Museum, The Walters Art Museum, the University of Arizona, the University of Pennsylvania, and the Getty Conservation Institute. More information about the Institute is available online at: www.artcons.udel.edu/public-outreach/iraq-institute

Iraq's heritage specialists are eager to take advantage of these educational opportunities, which are not available elsewhere in Iraq or the region. However, they all hold institutional positions in their home cities, where their salaries are needed to support their homes and families. Without assistance to cover their living expenses while they are away in Erbil, these professionals are unable to afford to attend the IICAH programs. Therefore, scholarship support to cover their daily food and incidental expenses while they attend the IICAH programs is urgently needed. Any donation amount is welcome; a gift of $3000 will support one student's living expenses at the Institute for a full year!

Checks should be made out to The Walters Art Museum, with "Packard Fund—Iraqi Students" designated in the lower left. Please include a brief cover letter stating your intention to donate to educational expenses for Iraqi conservation students. You will receive a thank you letter from The Walters and your entire contribution is tax deductible.

Please send your donation to:

This highly regarded project benefits the cultural heritage and people of Iraq by building professional capacity in the specialists responsible for the management and preservation of Iraq's, and the world's, rich heritage. Thank you for your support.
